

I know firsthand the power of our public schools and caring teachers, because I came to Silicon Valley from an impoverished community in rural Oklahoma. I earned an engineering Ph.D. from Stanford University and currently work as a project manager. My family has made this area our home for the past 16 years, and I will have children in this district for the next 7 years. My experience has led me to make data-informed decisions with a student-centered focus.

My passion for our community is shown by the many leadership roles I've held across our local educational organizations, and also chairing math teams, musicals, robotics clubs, and community events. I also received the 2018 Saratoga Union School District Volunteer of the Year Award and am endorsed by the LGSUHSD Teacher's Association. I am driven to give back to this community that has given so much to me. To learn more, visit <https://www.mistydavies.com/schoolboard>
