

You feel it every month. Healthcare costs keep rising. Groceries are higher. Paychecks do not keep up. Young people leave because opportunity is limited. Farmers who feed our communities struggle to hold on. Congress finds billions for foreign aid without hesitation, yet critical water and energy infrastructure at home stays unfinished for decades. Opportunity shrinks. Families are forced apart. That is not a funding shortage—it is a failure of priorities. Water, energy, and food security are kitchen-table and national security. I will fight to deliver the infrastructure our farms and towns need, strengthen local economies so families can stay together, and push policies that ease the daily cost pressures on wage earners. Students deserve schools focused on real results, financial literacy, and strong civics. Small businesses still recovering deserve targeted relief. Immigrants who want to contribute deserve practical tools—English, financial independence, and civic knowledge—so they can fully strengthen our communities. Working families deserve a tax system that does not punish paychecks while protecting only the largest corporations. I am not interested in managing decline. I am running to put our local communities first—with practical, measurable results that let families stay, work, and build a future right here.
